Ben-Gurion Won A Pledge Of Continued Co-operation And Support For Israel From Adenauer At Moving Encounter

Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion of Israel won a pledge, in New York, of continued co-operation and support for the small Jewish nation from Chancellor Konrad Adenauer of West Germany as the two leaders held their first face-to-face encounter.

The two heads of government spent almost two hours together in a private conversation in Dr. Adenauer's suite on the thirty-fifth floor of the Waldorf-Astoria, says the New York Herald Tribune. They came to the United States for basically the same purpose — to see that their countries' interests will be kept in mind at the summit conference set for May.

The Israeli and the German each read a brief statement at the conclusion of their talk which took on added interest because there are no diplomatic relations between the two countries on the ambassadorial level.

Dr. Adenauer, eighty-four, said he was "deeply moved" by the meeting with Mr. Ben-Gurion because "for a long time I have been an admirer of his statesmanship as the chief architect of modern Israel and its remarkable development."

In a reference to the extermination of 6,000,000 Jews during the Nazi occupation of Europe, the Chancellor, an ardent anti-Nazi during the Hitler era, said:

"The German people draw a deep satisfaction from the fact that through restitution to victims of Nazism, a contribution was made toward the process of rehabilitation in Israel."

He expressed the certainty, says the New York Times, that "the German people as well as my government are convinced that our mutual co-operation with and support for Israel will continue to bear fruit in the future."

Prime Minister Ben-Gurion, in his statement, said he was "glad" to meet the Chancellor, and he added: "My people cannot forget its past. But we remember the past not in order to brood upon it, but in order that it shall never reoccur."

Mr. Ben-Gurion, who headed a government coalition that fell last year over the issue of Israel's sale of small arms to Germany, recalled that: "I said in the Knesset (parliament) last summer that the Germany of today is not the Germany of yesterday."

"After having met the Chancellor," he continued, "I am sure that judgment was correct." He concluded the statement with this sentiment: "I wish the Chancellor every success in his efforts to guide Germany in its path of democracy and international co-operation."

Mr. Ben-Gurion walked down two flights of stairs from his suite to call on the Chancellor in the presidential suite. The call was so arranged, it was said, because the Israeli Prime Minister, at seventy-three, is eleven years younger than Dr. Adenauer.

Besides the two leaders, only their interpreters were present. The two men met in private, but authoritative sources said Chancellor Adenauer gave assurances that the restitution payments to individual Jewish victims of Nazism and to Israel would be continued according to the existing agreement, says the New York Herald Tribune. Under the accord concluded in 1952 and scheduled to expire early in 1963, the Bonn Government already has paid more than 5,000,000,000 Deutsche marks ($1,430,000,000) in restitution.

The two leaders also discussed the forthcoming summit conference, disarmament, and sources of East-West tension.

Dr. Adenauer rose from a couch, smiling broadly, to greet his guest. Except for their interpreters, Dr. Heinz Weber, of West Germany, and Aryeh Manor, Israeli Minister for Economic Affairs, the two men were then left alone. Mr. Ben-Gurion sat in the corner of a sofa below a pale green mural of a Hudson River scene. The Chancellor sat close to him in a chair.

With both sipping orange juice from tall glasses, Premier Ben-Gurion began the conversation somewhat stiffly in Hebrew. The talk became more cordial and personal as it continued. The meeting was expected to last an hour, but went on twice that long.

When photographers were admitted to the room at 11:30, the two leaders were still talking in fragments of German, French, and English, trying to convey ideas to each other without the help of interpreters. As the photographers crowded about them, the Chancellor lost his temper and shouted: "Out with them." Several photographers were manhandled by German security agents.

The conference of Dr. Adenauer and Mr. Ben-Gurion, opposed by some political factions in Israel, was not an attempt at negotiation, says the New York Times. The outstanding issue between the two countries — establishment of diplomatic relations — was put aside. It was a meeting that the German Chancellor and the Israeli Premier had considered in correspondence for years as one more step toward mitigating the heritage of the Hitler era.

Official spokesmen of both countries would not comment on the substance of the talks other than to say they had "a general conversation" about world affairs. Israeli sources stressed, however, that an exchange of ambassadors was not discussed.

For both nations, the subject is a possible source of embarrassment. Right-wing elements in Israel vigorously oppose any contact with Germany, while the West Germans fear that too close involvement with Israel might result in recognition of East Germany by the Arab nations.

It was emphasized that there was no specific agenda for the talks. Nevertheless, it is assumed that the two leaders covered a variety of issues, including the recent surge of anti-Semitic incidents in West Germany and the possible sale to Israel of German military equipment.

When the two men ended their talk, they shook hands. With the ramrod-straight Chancellor towering over the bushy-haired Premier, they posed for photographs. Then they read statements.

In Washington Mr. Ben-Gurion said that the West could contribute to the development of the United Arab Republic if Cairo would resolve to live in peace with its neighbors, says the New York Times. The Israel leader met with members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and several other invited Senators for an hour and forty-five minutes. Afterward, at a news conference, he summarized the substance of his informal discussion with the Senators.

"If Egypt will be satisfied to live in peace with its neighbors — not only its Jewish neighbors, but its Arab neighbors as well — it may do a great deal to persuade the West to help their country, to change their country to a healthy, educated country," Mr. Ben-Gurion said.

This objective could be achieved, he added, if only the Egyptian leaders "would apply their energies to that and not to negative objectives, such as making war and dominating other peoples."

Mr. Ben-Gurion recalled that the Middle East was "the cradle of civilization" and expressed confidence that, "given an atmosphere of peace," it could "become again an important center of civilization."

Peace, he emphasized, is the key to all the problems of the area — settlement of the dispute over Palestine refugees, division of waters for irrigation projects and development of Arab countries and Israel alike. "We are willing to make our contribution to that end," he said.

Mr. Ben-Gurion, in the United States on an unofficial visit, received an honorary degree from Brandeis University in Waltham, Mass. He met for two hours with President Eisenhower and for an hour and a half with Under Secretary of State Douglas Dillon and other State Department officials. He had a talk with Secretary of State Christian A. Herter at Mr. Herter's home. Mr. Herter, was unable to see Mr. Ben-Gurion earlier because of illness.

At United Nations, N.Y., Premier David Ben-Gurion of Israel declared that he saw the prospect of an end of war in this generation. He said the one thing that the United Nations should try to accomplish could be summed up by one word in Hebrew: shalom — peace, says the New York Times. The Premier made this statement after a two-hour private talk with Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold.

Mr. Ben-Gurion was said to have stressed Israel's immediate concern about Egyptian troop concentrations along the border of the United Arab Republic, as well as the continuing dispute with Cairo over the refusal to allow Israeli shipping through the Suez Canal.

The Premier and Mrs. Ben-Gurion were guests of Mr. Hammarskjold at a luncheon in the Secretary General's Park Avenue apartment and later at a reception at the U.N. attended by a limited number of invited delegates. No Arab representatives were present. Tunisia, the only Arab state invited, had refused to attend.

Arkady A. Sobolev, chief Soviet delegate, did not attend because of a previous appointment, but Poland and Czechoslovakia were represented. Privately, Arab delegates made no secret of their displeasure about the Ben-Gurion visit, but they apparently had not decided to take formal action.

The 73-year-old Premier showed no weariness after a busy day. It began with the early-morning visit with Chancellor Adenauer of West Germany, and ended with a reception for Israeli officials and their wives at the Israeli Consulate, 11 East Seventieth Street.

When the Premier's party arrived at the United Nations, a lone picket walked on First Avenue carrying a placard lauding Mr. Ben-Gurion as "our great leader." The sign carrier identified himself as Isador Wolfson, of 1012 Longfellow Avenue, the Bronx. He stationed himself outside to await a group of Arab sympathizers.

They arrived about an hour later. At 4 P.M. thirty men and women appeared with signs attacking Mr. Ben-Gurion. Mahmoud Fahmores, an Egyptian graduate student majoring in education at Co-

Expert On Jewish History Was World Authority On Nazi Crimes

Dr. Philip Friedman, fifty-eight, one of the world's leading authorities on the history of Nazi crimes against the Jews, died at his home, 549 W. 123d Street, in New York. An expert on Jewish history, especially in Eastern Europe, Dr. Friedman at his death was the dean of the Jewish Teachers' Seminary, 154 E. 70th Street, and a lecturer in Jewish history at Columbia University's graduate division.

A member of the Jewish underground in Poland, he fought the Nazis from 1939 to 1944 and was one of 870 Jews in Lwow, Poland, to survive in a pre-war Jewish population of 170,000, says the New York Times. Born in Lemberg, Galicia, Austria, now Lwow, Dr. Friedman received his doctorate in 1925 from the University of Vienna and taught in Lodz, Vilna, and Warsaw, Poland.

When the Nazis established a ghetto in Lwow in 1942, he obtained false papers, changed his home repeatedly and monitored intelligence broadcasts in several languages. His wife, daughter, and son perished in concentration camps.

After the war he founded the Central Jewish Historical Commission in Poland and was a member of Polish State Commissions that investigated Auschwitz and Chelmno concentration camps and other Nazi crimes. He was an adviser on Jewish affairs at the Nuremberg trials. He lectured again in Lodz before leaving in 1946 as director of the Centre de Documentation Juive in Paris, and was also educational director of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Commission in the United States Zone of Germany.

He joined Columbia in 1948 and the Seminary in 1949. He has been on leave from the Seminary since 1957. He was a member of the research committee and board of directors of the YIVO Institute for Jewish Research, 1048 Fifth Avenue, and director of the bibliographic division of the Yad Vashem war memorial in Jerusalem, Israel.

He was a fellow of the American Academy for Jewish Research

Bnai Brith Head Calls For Drastic Changes In Religious Education

The head of Bnai Brith has criticized what he terms the "hesitancy" of the American Jewish community "to face up to its religious educational problems with the same vigor that it approaches social and philanthropic issues."

Label A. Katz, president of the 116-year-old Jewish service organization, warned that the "cultural upsweep in Jewish life that is finding its best hope and impetus among young people is being thwarted by a haphazard and negligent approach to the need of their religious education."

He made these observations at a news conference at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York after the completion of a four-month tour of the U.S. following his election last spring as the fourteenth president of Bnai Brith, says the New York Times. Mr. Katz, a resident of New Orleans, Louisiana, is 41 years old and is the youngest man to become president of Bnai Brith.

Mr. Katz cited a recent analysis that concluded that Jewish education today was a "mile wide and an inch deep" and held that the educational content in Jewish schools was lagging behind the increasing enrollments.

He called attention to the lack of facilities, and attributed the failure in Jewish education to "adult short-sightedness." He added that Jewish educators were "underpaid, overworked and short in number — boxed in by the lack of attention that is given to the problem."

Mr. Katz held that the Sunday schools and afternoon Hebrew school study were "woefully inadequate, doing little more than perpetuating a kind of juvenile Judaism that has little relationship to religious and cultural life for the student in his later years."

In calling for "drastic revision in Jewish religious education," Mr. Katz declared that until "this is accomplished, we will be short-changing our youngsters, arresting the cultural maturity of the largest Jewish community in the world."

The Jewish community, he said, "ought to take a long, hard look at the quality of its all-day (parochial) Jewish schools and explore their short-comings."

A well-financed, coordinated effort by Jewish communities, he said, "could eliminate the physical shortages, open new and modern approaches to curricular development and expose Jewish youngsters to a religious education that would be relevant to their needs and interests."

Mr. Katz advocated that Jewish educators and religious leaders join with group workers to establish "higher standards of religious education," reports the New York Time.

In outlining plans for his administration, Mr. Katz said that Bnai Brith in the next three years would give "high priority" to the problems of Jewish education. Bnai Brith has more than 400,000 members.

ABC and HIGH STANDARDS GO TOGETHER

In qualifying for membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations, publishers are doing more than providing advertisers with the facts about the circulation of their publications.

They are also giving active support to the principle that advertising space should be bought and sold only on the basis of verified information — a principle that has contributed in large measure to the interests of all advertisers.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is not subsidized by a group or an organization and which had the distinction of being a member of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

Napoleon's "Sanhedrin"

BY TRUDE WEISS-ROSMARIN

On the stage of history, dictators bestride the scene as commanders of absolute and ruthless power. Offstage, however, they are often insecure individuals driven to over-compensate for their self-doubts by delusions of grandeur, translated into action. Because the dictator labors under deep-rooted inferiority feelings, usually grounded in real facts of life (Napoleon's diminutive size, Hitler's lowly and obscure family background), he is driven to achieve "greatness" and to measure his strength against obstacles that seem insuperable. Perhaps this is why dictators have aspired "to solve the Jewish problem" which, according to pagan opinion as well as Christian theology, defies solution by mere mortals. From Alexander the Great to the Nazi and Communist dictators of our day, would-be rulers of the world have responded to the challenge posed by the existence and survival of the Jews, whose ethos is the very negation of the authoritarian credo that physical might determines the direction of history and the fate of mankind.

These dictators aimed at wiping the Jews off the face of the earth, but they differed in their methods. While some of them hoped "to solve the Jewish problem" by physically annihilating the Jews, in the manner of Hitler and his like-minded predecessors, others concentrated on attacking those things which make the Jews what they are. Alexander the Great, for example, initiated a "melting pot" program in the Hellenistic mold which went far toward bringing about an assimilation where Jews hardly differed from their neighbors in Alexandria and other focal points of Hellenism.

The same strategy was followed by Napoleon I when he set about to implement the decree of the French National Assembly of September 28, 1791, which had abolished the civil disabilities of the Jews and bestowed equal rights upon them. Napoleon went much further than the revolutionary emancipators, who had bestowed freedom upon the Jews as a "gift" with the understanding that the recipients would reciprocate with "assimilation."

For Napoleon, "assimilation" in the sense it was defined by Count Mirabeau, L'Abbé Grégoire and Clermont-Tonnère — "To Jews as human beings, everything; to Jews as a nation, nothing" — was not enough. He wanted to reconstruct Judaism in the image of the revolutionary French Empire, solving once and for all "the Jewish problem" by means of the annihilation of Judaism as a distinctive way of life. Like Stalin and his successors, Napoleon proclaimed tolerance for Jews and Judaism while laying the axe to the distinctiveness that is the basis of their being and survival.

Towards this end, Napoleon convened an Assembly of Jewish Notables to furnish authoritative answers to certain questions which in effect called on the Jews to prove that they were really "deserving" of the emancipation granted them. Napoleon wanted them to go on record affirming their acceptance of "the law of the land" unconditionally, including its impingement on their internal affairs, especially marriage and divorce. The Assembly of Notables began its deliberations on July 29, 1806, and its 111 members stayed in session until February 5, 1807. The agenda consisted of 12 questions to which Napoleon wanted definitive answers. These questions were worded as follows:

1) Is it lawful for Jews to have more than one wife?
2) Is divorce allowed by the Jewish religion? Is a divorce valid when declared not by courts of justice but by virtue of law contravening the French code?
3) May a Jewess marry a Christian, or a Jew a Christian woman? Or does Jewish law command that Jews may marry only amongst themselves?
4) Do Jews consider Frenchmen not of the Jewish religion as brethren or as strangers?
5) What conduct does Jewish law impose toward Frenchmen not of the Jewish religion?
6) Do the Jews born in France, and treated by law as French citizens, acknowledge France as their country? Are they bound to defend it? Are they bound to obey the laws and follow the directions of the Civil Code?
7) Who elects the rabbis?
8) What kind of legal jurisdiction do the rabbis have over Jews?
9) Are the legal jurisdiction of the rabbis and the forms of election regulated by Jewish law, or are they only sanctioned by custom?
10) Are there occupations from which the Jews are banned by Jewish law?
11) Does Jewish law prohibit Jews from taking usury from their Jewish brethren?
12) Does Jewish law forbid, or does it permit, usury in dealings with strangers?

Obviously, the questions pertaining to the ethics of human relations between Jews and non-Jews did not discomfit the Notables, for Jewish law consistently decrees a single standard of neighborly love and human relations. Nor was there any difficulty about what Jewish law demands of its followers respecting loyalty to the country of their citizenship. The Prophet Jeremiah had long ago exhorted the captives in Babylonia to "Seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captive, and pray unto the Lord for it; for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace." As for polygamy, it was outlawed for Ashkenazi Jews some nine hundred years before Napoleon.

It was not so simple, however, to furnish "satisfactory" answers to questions 2 and 3, for Judaism does not recognize civil marriage and divorce as valid, unless implemented by Jewish religious ceremonies, nor does it permit intermarriage for its followers. Nevertheless, the Assembly of Notables went on record affirming that religious marriage and divorce were henceforth to be considered only as supplementary seals of civil marriage and divorce, and that the "false interpretations of the Law" which proscribed intermarriage had to be replaced by new interpretations more in consonance with the spirit of the times.

Napoleon was obviously pleased. He wanted, however, to invest the answers of the Notables with inconteatable religious authority and so he informed the Assembly that he wanted them to reconstitute the Sanhedrin of old in order to place the official religious seal on the principles enunciated by the secular representatives. Accordingly, on October 6, 1806, the Assembly of Notables issued a proclamation to all Jewish communities in French-dominated Europe to send delegates to a Sanhedrin of seventy-one members soon to be convened.

While most Western Jews responded enthusiastically to the idea, the Polish Jews were not so ready to gloss over Napoleon's comment on the assistance to his army in Poland during the war against Prussia (1806-1807): "The Sanhedrin certainly proves useful to me!" There were not a few in Germany, too, who saw through the dictator's high-sounding declarations.

Although it took several months to bring the Sanhedrin together, the plan of Napoleon fully materialized when on February 9, 1807 "the spectacle," as David Friedlaender, Moses Mendelssohn's spiritual heir, characterized it, opened in a specially rebuilt hall of Paris' Hôtel de Ville. There were forty-six rabbis and twenty-five lay representatives in attendance.

In emulation of the customs and traditions associated with the authentic Sanhedrin which sat in Jerusalem, the members were attired in long-flowing robes with silk capes and wore three-cornered hats. Seated in a semi-circle, according to age, with the laymen in back of the rabbis, the group presented a dramatic spectacle and, as the sessions were open to the public, large crowds flocked to the Hôtel de Ville to watch the proceedings.

As was expected, Napoleon's Sanhedrin, which sat in session

MONTREAL MARRIAGES

SOLOMON-PANTEL

The marriage of Miss Eileen Pantel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Pantel, 2258 Fulton Road, to David Solomon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Solomon, 7087 Chester Avenue, took place at Chevra Kadisha-Bnai Jacob Synagogue, on Sunday, February 14, at half-past six o'clock, Rabbi David Roth officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She wore a princess gown of duchess satin, re-embroidered in Alencon lace; fashioned with a portrait neckline, outlined in lace; long sleeves; and full bouffant skirt, with a bustle back extending into a chapel train. Her veil of tulle illusion was held by a jewelled crown. Miss Lydia Pantel, sister of the bride, was maid of honour, wearing a pale blue silk faille gown, with appliques embroidered in sequins. Miss Joyce Pantel, as junior bridesmaid, wore a blue organza gown, with a stand-away collar appliqued with white lace centered with seed-pearl-beads and sequins. Francine Pantel, cousin of the bride, was flower girl and wore a white organza dress, with blue embroidery; and carried a basket of rose petals. Tom Solomon was best man. Jeffrey Kohn, cousin of the groom, was ring-bearer. Standards of white and pink roses and greenery decorated the Synagogue and hall. Mrs. Pantel, mother of the bride, wore a blue gown, re-embroidered with lace and sequins; and a petalled hat of matching material; and carried orchids pinned to her purse. Mrs. Solomon, mother of the groom, wore a midnight-blue, draped chiffon gown, with pleated, floating panels; and a hat of matching material; and carried white orchids. Mr. and Mrs. David Solomon spent their wedding trip in Acapulco, Mexico. They have taken up residence at 2860 Darlington Avenue.

SILVERSTONE-VEISBERG

until March 9, 1807, faithfully fulfilled the part assigned to it. Its decisions, formulated in 9 Articles, invested the answers of the Notables with ecclesiastic authority and so proclaimed that, except in the circumscribed realm of religion, the Jews were fully integrated into the fabric of the Empire. The crucial Articles, of course, were those which set forth that "divorce by Jewish law is valid only after previous decision of the civil authorities" and that "the religious act of marriage must be preceded by a civil contract" and, most important of all, that "marriages between Jews and Christians are valid although they cannot be religiously sanctioned."

Today, of course, the Articles are taken for granted by all Jews. One hundred and fifty years ago, however, the denial of separate Jewish jurisdiction in family matters was tantamount to the declaration that Judaism had ceased to function as a vital force in the life of the Jewish community, having been reduced to an insignificant religious appendage. Napoleon had aimed at transforming the Jewish "nation" into a "religious sect," very much like Stalin had hoped to drain Jewish vitality by means of "encouraging" the non-religious and non-nationalistic "Jewish culture" of the Jews in Soviet Russia.

Officially, Napoleon's strategy had succeeded. Before long, however, it became apparent that the bargain counter at which the Jews had purchased emancipation for the price of complete assimilation had short-changed both parties to the transaction. Although the newly emerged "Frenchmen of Mosaic belief" were zealous in displaying their utterly French behavior, even in the synagogue itself, they were not accepted as they wished to be. The French masses con-lumbia University, said the pickets were students and Arab refugees. They walked quietly in a long oval, circling Mr. Wolfson, who seemed not to mind.

The Premier held an informal meeting with correspondents in the Trusteeship Council chamber. Raising an admonishing finger, he told his audience it could do much to help the cause of peace, says the New York Times. "You should stress that there is a brotherhood of nations throughout the world — Europeans, American, Asians, Africans," he said. "I may seem a visionary, but peace may come true in our generation. People will stop making war and know that it is best to live in peace and to make all peoples free and independent."

Mr. Ben-Gurion had tea with Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and in the evening went by plane to London.

Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion, a bookish man, had indulged his taste for literature the day before. For two and one-half hours, beginning at 12:30 P.M., he browsed and bought. But unlike the bibliophile who spends an afternoon in intensive research with possibly one book to take home, the Prime Minister purchased forty.

Brentano's on Fifth Avenue and Stechert-Hafner, Inc., 31 East Tenth Street, received orders to ship the books quickly to Mr. Ben-Gurion's suite at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. Between visits to the bookstores, he managed to remember to call the Paragon Book Gallery, 140 East Fifty-seventh Street, to order the third volume of a pending ten-volume work, "Science and Civilization in China," by Joseph Needham.

The accent was on psychological themes. Among the purchases were some treatises on Judaica and orientalism, Greek philosophy, Hindu mysticism, existentialism, existentialism and Zen Buddhism. None of the purchases dealt with current events.

A photographer placed a book in Mr. Ben-Gurion's hand to take a picture at Brentano's. Israel's 73-year-old chief executive glanced at the title, smiled and put it down:

"I already know what's in this," he said.

It was "For Victory in Peaceful Competition with Capitalism," by Nikita S. Khrushchev. The book, published by E. P. Dutton, says on the flyleaf that it is the first work by Mr. Khrushchev to be published in New York. "It gives his blueprint for tomorrow as he reveals what he thinks about everything from sputnik to the liberation of Berlin."

Martin Slomka, the store's general manager, showed Mr. Ben-Gurion a book he considered might be of interest. It was "Diplomacy in the Changing World," a symposium edited by Stephen D. Kertes and M. A. Fitzsimmons. Again, Mr. Ben-Gurion smiled. "Is there such a thing?" he asked.

Mr. Ben-Gurion picked up two books, "Practice of Zen," by Chang Chen-Chi, and "The Way of Zen." He turned the pages, "I don't know," he said. "The more I read about it, I can't understand what they want." Then with a shrug of his shoulders, he said, "I'll try again," and bought the books.

About 150 customers in the store kept flattening him against the bookshelves with the Hebrew greetings of "Shalom," (peace) and "Baruch Haba" (blessed is he who comes), says the New York Times. His familiar halo of white hair standing out in bold relief against the book-racks, Mr. Ben-Gurion returned the greeting without taking his eyes off the books.

Outside the store on Fifth Avenue at Forty-seventh Street, the crowd had swelled to about 500 persons. They cheered him as he left. Mr. Ben-Gurion then took a limousine to Stechert-Hafner. There, he purchased books on ancient Greek, Hindu and Hebrew themes.

Then back to the Waldorf-Astoria went Mr. Ben-Gurion and his security guards. At 5 P.M., Avraham Harman, Israel's Ambassador, gave an informal party in Mr. Ben-Gurion's honor. Later in the evening, Mr. Ben-Gurion spoke before an audience of 400 persons, including leaders of the Israel Bond Organization and the United Jewish Appeal, at the Pierre Hotel. It was a private meeting with all of his remarks off the record.

Israel's 73-year-old Premier told 2,000 persons at Yeshiva University that he believed "full-heartedly that the day will come — and it is not far off — that peace will be established with our neighbors." Mr. Ben-Gurion went on: "I believe with unquestioning faith that before you people reach my white hair you will see complete peace in the world."

In his departing remarks at Idlewild Airport, Mr. Ben-Gurion said that he was leaving the United States with the "feeling that the friendship between our two Governments and peoples rests on the solid foundation of principles and ideals shared in common; on the aspiration of freedom, peace, human dignity and the elevation of man. I know that peace is the objective of the American people," he said.

Mr. Ben-Gurion moved at a feverish pace, says the New York Times. The schedule began at 8 A.M. and wound up in mid-afternoon after he had delivered three thirty-minute addresses, two in Hebrew, the other in English, at three prominent institutions of Judaism.

In his three addresses, Mr. Ben-Gurion reiterated his hope that American Jewish youth "with the spirit of pioneering" would come to his country for a year or more to help build up Israel.

He spoke at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, the center of Conservative Judaism, 122d Street and Broadway; at Yeshiva University, an Orthodox institution, 186th Street and Amsterdam Avenue; and at the New York branch of the Hebrew Union College — Jewish Institute of Religion, 40 West Sixty-eighth Street.

At the seminary, Mr. Ben-Gurion said: "I want you to come to Israel to live, and to create, even to suffer with us, and if, God forbid, should it be necessary, fight with us." He asked how many

CLASS IN COOKERY

BAGEL

three eggs — flour
three tablespoons sugar — three tablespoons oil
pinch of salt

Beat eggs and sugar. Add oil and salt and mix well. Add sifted flour, enough to enable you to handle dough. Cut into six parts. Flour hands and roll dough into one-quarter inch strips. Cut into three inch lengths and seal ends of each to form circle. When all the dough is made up into rounds, drop them into rapidly boiling water to cook for three minutes, and drain. Place the bagel on an ungreased cookie sheet, sprinkle with poppy seeds, and bake at 425 degrees, ten minutes on each side till golden brown.

Mrs. S. Falergrad,
4557 La Peltrie Street, Montreal.

SCONES

one cup sifted all-purpose flour — three tablespoons butter one teaspoon baking powder — one tablespoon sugar one-half teaspoon salt — one egg
one-quarter cup raisins

Cream butter and sugar; add beaten egg, and sifted flour, sifted again with baking powder and salt. Add a little milk, just enough to make a soft dough. Add raisins. Roll out dough and cut with a small round cutter. Set the scones on greased baking sheet. Bake in hot oven, about 400 degrees, for about ten minutes, until golden brown. Mrs. Melzer received this recipe from her daughter, Mrs. W. F. G. Borovoy, of Newcastle-On-Tyne, England.

MARRIAGES

EDELIST-COWAN

The marriage of Miss Lana Cowan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Cowan, 30 Lyonsgate Drive, to Jerry Edelist, son of Mr. and Mrs. Hyman Edelist, 44 Brookview Drive, was solemnized at Torah Emeth Synagogue, on Sunday, March 6, at half-past five o'clock, with Rabbi Marcus Ochs officiating at a candlelight ceremony. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She wore a gown of duchess peau de soie, fashioned with a bateau neckline of Guipure lace, re-embroidered with seed-pearl-beads and drop pearls. The bouffant skirt was appliqued with the same lace and had a back panel which formed a butterfly bustle, caught at the waist with roses of the material; and ended in a chapel train. A crown of seed-pearl-beads held her fingertip veil of silk illusion and she carried a white bible adorned with a white orchid and flying streamers. Miss Barbara Edelist, sister of the groom, was maid of honour. She wore a lilac-coloured gown of slipper satin, styled with a scooped neckline; short sleeves; and tunic skirt. She had a rhinestone tiara, and carried a cascade bouquet of pink roses and white carnations. The bridesmaids were: Miss Renee Levitt, and Miss Brenda Baker, cousin of the bride. Each wore a deep-orchid-coloured, slipper satin gown similar to that of the maid of honour; and had a rhinestone tiara, and carried a cascade bouquet of pink roses and white carnations. Miss Ferne Cowan, sister of the bride, who was also a bridesmaid, wore a lilac-coloured silk taffeta gown with puffed sleeves, and a draped skirt; with a rhinestone tiara; and carried a cascade bouquet of pink roses and white carnations. NAPOLEON'S "SANHEDRIN"

tinued to regard them as Jews and would not accept them as Frenchmen. The religious barrier loomed as large as ever, no matter how zealously the Frenchmen, and later the Germans, of Mosaic belief attempted to modernize the ritual and purge it of all customs and ceremonies that might appear "objectionable" and "offensive."

Before long it became clear that cultural and national assimilation were not enough. To be fully accepted into the body politic of the host nation of his citizenship, the 19th century Western Jew had to assimilate religiously as well. As a result, tens of thousands of assimilated Jews decided to follow the road to its logical end and completed the process by means of baptism.

Today, exactly one hundred and fifty years after Napoleon's Sanhedrin put its seal on the dictator's ill-concealed attempt to solve the Jewish problem by transforming the Jews into Frenchmen and "Europeans," we are no longer deceived by the overt professions which cloaked the scheme.

The tragedy of all edicts of emancipation was that they were bestowed as rewards for "good behavior" rather than issuing from the conviction that all men are equal before the law. The countries that emancipated their Jews entered with them into a contract, as it were, under whose terms citizenship and equal rights were granted to those Jews who proved themselves "worthy" by relinquishing their Jewish distinctiveness, their national history, and their dreams for the future as a people.

The contract which Napoleon's Sanhedrin signed was doomed from the outset because it was predicated on the false axiom that Jews are nothing but members of a "sect." Precisely because Judaism is anything but a "sect," Jews could not fulfill their part of the emancipation-assimilation bargain. The tragedy of the Jew in modern society is contained in the intent of Napoleon's plan, which made emancipation contingent upon complete assimilation. Napoleon's scheme emancipated only the dead hulk of the Jew: it recognized his human dignity and equality only after he had committed spiritual suicide. The inevitable result was that both parties to this transaction felt cheated.

The century and a half since Napoleon's Sanhedrin met has seen cataclysms and revolutions which have ushered in a new world. But in this new world, too, "the Jewish problem" persists, for its character is such that it defies "solution" except in a setting that accepts the Jew in the fullness of his Jewishness — and this fullness is such that even a pluralistically oriented society is not prepared to accept in all its implications.

The Role Of The Federation Of Jewish Women's Organizations

BY FLORENCE HUTNER, EXECUTIVE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED JEWISH WELFARE FUND OF TORONTO

This is the season of planning; travel advertisements are being studied; time tables are being scanned; package tours are being examined, and jet travel is being considered. People are talking about trips to the Yukon, to Mexico, to Europe, to Japan, and to Israel. Far-off places like Dubrovnick, Hammerfest, Hong-Kong, and Istanbul have replaced many other areas as the place names to be mentioned. Faster boats, swifter planes, and better economic conditions have opened travel lanes for thousands of people.

The preparation for travel usually entails vaccination, passports, visas, and suitable wardrobe; rarely does it include the study of one's own community as a means for enjoying other countries. Travellers who are barely acquainted with the collections in their own cities will spend hours in European art galleries and museums. Visitors to London, Paris, and Madrid will seek out architectural masterpieces, without being aware that in their own communities there are buildings of fine design and historical significance. Tourists to Israel will visit homes for the aged, children's centres, and the like, who have never been through similar institutions within a few miles of their own homes. It is easier to organize a tour to "The Important Capitals of Europe" than to the major social welfare agencies of a community.

In one afternoon or evening in Toronto, any group can visit one of the most modern homes for the aged on the continent; a rehabilitation workshop; and a students' centre. These are but three institutions or programs which can be combined in two to three hours. Each tour is tailored to meet the interests of the group and the individuals in the group. The details are arranged through the Community Tour Committee of the Federation of Jewish Women's Organizations, which supplies tour guides and transportation if necessary. Many organizations report that their members have found these "home-town" tours informative and interesting.

Community-Tours are one of the community services sponsored and developed by the Federation. Leadership institutes for the officers and chairmen of Federation affiliated organizations have provided outstanding programs during the past winter. These institutes have brought organizations together for mutual exchange of programs, and have also illustrated effective methods of administration for an organization. A playlet showing the wrong and right way of conducting a meeting has been written by the members of the Federation, and is available to the individual organization which wishes to produce it for its own members. Other program aids are also available through the Federation of Jewish Women's Organizations; scrapbooks of samples of effective publicity; speakers on welfare and other topics; lectures on cultural topics and consultation service on problems of organization administration.

One of the most important features of the Federation has been a Calendar Clearance Committee, which periodically reviews the dates and events registered by its member organizations in an effort to avoid over-lapping and duplication of dates. It has been found that the simple act of registration of a date does not cover the various considerations necessary for a successful event; two dances in the same week, a succession of bazaars in the same month may vitiate the effectiveness of each of these events. The work of the Calendar Clearance Committee is slowly securing the co-operation of the organizations for a better schedule of community events.

The Federation of Jewish Women's Organizations has been under the sponsorship of the United Jewish Welfare Fund of Toronto, which has provided a budget and staff for its program. The response to its first year of activity has convinced its sponsors of its need and role in the community. It is hoped that as it becomes more firmly established, its services will grow and its scope enlarge so that it may continue to enrich the programs of women's organizations. It is overcoming the isolation of the organization in a large community, just as neighbourhood and community centres bring people closer together. Organizations are free to come and go, association is purely voluntary, but the women who have come together under its aegis are finding that this contact has been rewarding both to them personally, and for the program of the organizations they represent.

Any plans for the extension of the Federation of Jewish Women's Organizations will be the results of the wishes and desires of its members. Having no ideology of its own, beyond that of being of service, the Federation can be likened to a chameleon which takes on the coloration of its environment; it is adaptable to the needs of its own members, and its strength resides in the horizons it sets for itself.

BEN-GURION

would come to Israel to live there. Out of an audience of 400, about fifty raised their hands.

Mr. Ben-Gurion, speaking in Hebrew, also called for an intensified study of the Hebrew language to serve as a "link among Jewish people the world over." At Yeshiva University Mr. Ben-Gurion, speaking again in Hebrew, remarked that he was able to leave Israel because "the Guardian of Israel neither sleeps nor rests." At this point a bearded man, whose identity was not determined, rose and shouted in Hebrew: "Do you mean God or the Haganah?" The Haganah, before Israel's establishment as a nation, served as a defense force.

The police seized the man and evicted him from the auditorium. Mr. Ben-Gurion said: "Leave him be. I get that in Israel, too." In the synagogue of the Hebrew Union College Mr. Ben-Gurion spoke in English. He received gifts — a gold medal, manuscripts, a rare book and a bust — at the three institutions.

In London official sources said the Premier's discussion lasted nearly two hours and covered a wide range of problems in the Middle East and in the world as a whole. It is reliably understood, says the New York Times, that one of Mr. Ben-Gurion's primary aims is to get arms aid that would assure Israel equality with the growing force of the United Arab Republic, which is being supplied with arms largely from Communist nations.

A crowd of Arab students, estimated at more than a hundred, gathered at London airport for his arrival from New York. They carried banners reading: "Not Another Suez" and "No More British Arms for Israel."

The police maneuvered the demonstrators out of the range of the Ben-Gurion party before the visitors could be intercepted. Asked whether he sought more arms for Israel, the Premier replied: "You can't expect me to tell you that before I tell it to the people I have come to see." He added, however, that he favored "complete disarmament in the Middle East, with mutual inspection before world disarmament begins."

The Premier lunched with Mr. Macmillan, Mr. Lloyd, Hugh Gaitskell, Labor party leader, and Jo Grimond, Liberal party leader, among others. He then saw Mr. Macmillan and Mr. Lloyd for a private talk.

Before the arrival of Mr. Ben-Gurion, the Arab diplomatic missions had protested his visit in a joint representation to the Foreign Office. The spokesman for the Arab group, Ibrahim El Ahdad, the Lebanese Ambassador, called on John Profumo, Minister of State. The essence of Mr. Profumo's response was that Mr. Ben-Gurion was in London on a private visit.

In Washington the Embassy of the United Arab Republic charged Premier David Ben-Gurion with "unbecoming behavior" while a guest of the United States, says the New York Times. The embassy based its charge on Mr. Ben-Gurion's appeal to an American audience at the Jewish Theological Seminary in New York "to come to Israel to live . . . and if, God forbid, should it be necessary, to fight with us."

The embassy considered this an attempt "to instigate a segment of the people of the United States to immigrate to Palestine to fight the Arab peoples." Mr. Ben-Gurion's call for recruits was "not only harmful to the relations of the United States and the United Arab Republic, but it is hardly equaled in the history of international relations," the embassy said.
